ANDERSONS OPENS NEW OFFICES IN ABERDEEN

Andersons Northern, the farm business consultants who currently operate in Scotland and Northern England from offices in Thirsk and Penicuik, have opened a new office in Aberdeen following a merger with Aberdeen-based James Dick Agriculture.

James Dick Agriculture has been operating for the last eight years as an independent consultancy and has built up a well-established presence in the area while Andersons are known throughout the UK as providers of impartial, independent business advice to both farming and rural businesses.

A dedicated business research team provides analysis and information to support their consultants in the field. The office in Aberdeen will allow Andersons to improve their services to farm and rural businesses in the North-east.

“I have been running my own business for over eight years but now strategically the time is right to merge to enable me to provide a better service to my clients,” said James Dick, who has become a partner in the new business.

“Times are changing rapidly and with the volatilities in today’s market unlikely to lessen in the foreseeable future, consultants need to be well briefed and well informed. Andersons have the resources to provide up-to-date information quickly.

“This back-up can only add to what I can offer my existing clients and potential clients. As the client work becomes more specialised in certain areas, I will also be able to call on back-up where the job requires more expertise.”

Initially, the firm will be based at Mr Dick’s existing office and he will be assisted by Alex Carraffi, a recent graduate from Harper Adams. James can be contacted on 01224 867730 or 07801 953066
